The NBA is Still Close with SeaPort Airlines

The Portland-based airline gets passengers from downtown Seattle to downtown Portland in 90 minutes with greater comfort

Portland, Ore. — Even though Seattle lost its beloved Supersonics, basketball fans can still enjoy the thrill of the NBA in Portland by flying SeaPort Airlines. With SeaPort, customers can arrive 15 minutes before their flight, park on-site for free and avoid TSA and the congestion of Sea-Tac—getting them to the game faster and easier.

SeaPort Air operates out of King County Municipal Airport, also known as Boeing Field, just south of downtown, and out of its own terminal adjacent to Flightcraft at Portland International Airport. With scheduled commercial flights between Portland and Seattle starting at just $99 each way, SeaPort makes Portland's tax-free shopping, world-class theater and nationally-acclaimed restaurant scene easily accessible from Seattle.

SeaPort Airlines operates Swiss-built Pilatus PC-12s, a pressurized, fast and comfortable turbo-prop aircraft. SeaPort Airlines is a dba of Alaska Juneau Aeronautics, an FAA Part 135 Certified scheduled air service with 25 years experience in commercial aviation. Alaska Juneau Aeronautics and SeaPort Air's sister airline, Wings of Alaska, are wholly-owned subsidiaries of SeaPort Air Group, LLC, a Portland-based company founded by Portland investors John Beardsley, Tom Carrollo and Kent Craford.

Wings of Alaska operates daily scheduled service between Juneau, Alaska and four outlying communities. Information can be found at www.wingsofalaska.com. For reservations or more details about SeaPort Airlines, visit www.SeaPortAir.com or call 888-573-2767.
